'ISEA 2017 Proposal

1. Title:

   The current working title I have as of now is "The Archive" or "Writer's Archive"

2. Organizers and presenters' names and affiliations:

   The presenter for this project is Aaron Ngai, with not affiliations.

3. URL of the demo website or video:

   This project will be displayed on this website: https://angaidesigns.github.io/des157/

4. Abstract:

   This project creative story forum website and app that will allow users to share personal stories, fiction or non-fiction, and other genres of writing. This concept of sharing helps create this form of unity within a community can help others improve on their writing or be a part of a this new community in this divided time.

5. General Description of the Project:

   "The Archive" or "Writer's Archive" (name still in the process), is a project that aims to bring unity within the people. In this time, we are divided and our common ground is slowly stripping away. One thing that ties people together are stories, from any sort of genre, for many reasons. Upon sharing and reading stories this creates a common thread which most readers and writers relate to. Whether it is something personal or they share the same thought process, users will be able to connect and comment on this website or app to share insight or just simply relate, creating a community and unity all in one.

6. This project falls under two sub-themes; "Media art, landscape and heritage" and "Design, Art, Science, and Technology".

7. Biographies of the Author(s):

   Aaron Ngai is a UXI and Graphic Designer at the University of California, Davis. His interest in video games, and animations brought him into Design to be able to create work in two of his favorite fields, website and app design, and graphics. Aaron uses video games as his inspiration; drawn by the art, rendering, planning, and importantly the story of the games to further fuel and inspire his creativity and how he could implement that in his own work.
