Storyboards

In my storyboard analysis, I tried to convey the uses of the website and app without giving it away in the first scene or storyboard. From first glance both users/viewers described the project right away once going through the storyboards, describing it as a personal help website through the foundations of storytelling.

In my second story board I focused more on the idea of showing how this project can be used and what platforms would it be on. While the first story board focused on the personal aspect of connections through the project. From the overall feedback I feel that both users understood the process of the app and got the initial idea from the use of it in the story board.
